

Trudeau Demands Life In Prison For “Speech Crimes”

By Stephen Moore, public.substack.com

To protect children from sexual exploitation, Canada must pass the Online Harms Act, says Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's government.

"I am the parent of two young boys," said Justice Minister Arif Virani. "I will do whatever I can to ensure their digital world is as safe as the neighborhood we live in. Children are vulnerable online. They need to be protected from online sexual exploitation, hate, and cyberbullying."

But Virani's bill is totally unnecessary to protect children. Its real goal is to allow judges to sentence adults to prison for life for things they've said and for up to a year for crimes they haven't committed but that the government fears they might commit in the future.

As such, Trudeau and Virani's Online Harms Act (Bill C-63) is the most shocking of all the totalitarian, illiberal, and anti-Enlightenment pieces of legislation that have been introduced in the Western world in decades.

The Liberal government's censorship legislation, when considered in the context of Trudeau's sweeping abuse of governmental powers during and after the Covid pandemic and new subsidies for government propaganda, sets a new watermark in rising totalitarianism in Western societies.

In an unusually long statement in response to a series of questions asked by Public, the Trudeau government's "Canadian Heritage" department, which regulates the media, tried to ease our concerns. "Bill C-63 is meant to bolster the rights of Canadians to express their thoughts and opinions," said the anonymous official, "by creating a safer and more inclusive online space."

But the government spokesperson went on to confirm the shocking truth about the legislation, which is that it would put people in prison for life for things they've said, specifically, "advocating genocide."

"Bill C-63 would increase the maximum penalty specifically for advocating genocide from 5 years to life imprisonment," said an unnamed spokesperson for the Canadian government, "and from 2 years to 5 years, on indictment, for the willful promotion of hatred (section 319 of the Criminal Code)." [emphasis added]

This means someone who writes something that a government official decides is "advocating genocide" will face a longer maximum sentence than someone who rapes a child.

And what might count as "advocating genocide"? Today, there are prominent politicians around the world who say that supporters of Israel are advocating the genocide of the Palestinian people and that supporters of Hamas are advocating genocide against Jewish people. Imagine if they were in power. Under Trudeau's legislation, would they not be able to send their political enemies to prison for life?

a "peace bond" to incarcerate people before committing any crime. "Peace bonds are well-established tools in Canadian criminal law that are used to prevent an offense from being committed in the first place," the spokesperson said. "A peace bond will only be imposed where a court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offense will be committed."

But it's not just advocating genocide or the willful promotion of hatred that can now carry life sentences. Under the new bill, if anyone breaks any federal law and the courts find that the law was broken for hateful reasons, that person can also be subject to life in prison.

"People can be jailed for up to 12 months just because other people fear they may commit future hate speech," noted Joanna Baron, the executive director of the Canadian Constitution Foundation. "The options are a year of imprisonment or wear an ankle bracelet, submit to DNA tests, submit to ongoing monitoring."

Let's not mince words. The Trudeau government is attempting to create "pre-crime" no different from the kind depicted in Steven Spielberg's dystopian 2002 film, Minority Report. The main difference is that in that movie, there appeared to be far more certainty that the police were preventing murders. In the case of the government's hate speech law, the crime is of using one's words in ways that offend the government

In reality, what's happening in Canada is a terrifying assault on two core Enlightenment principles: free speech and equal justice under the law. Those of us in Canada are as outraged as anyone else. And we are, like many others, seeking to understand what exactly is happening. Why did a longtime liberal democracy put in power a person and a party committed to destroying it?

Strossen notes in her book Hate: Why We Should Fight It With Free Speech, Not Censorship that Canadian hate speech laws have in the past been used against French-Canadian nationalists, a Jewish community leader, and a pro-Israeli speaker. The government insists its definitions of hate are specific enough to avoid confusion. But Strossen documents how subjectively courts have enforced hate speech laws around the world.

And the new bill would take everything to a new extreme. Experts agree it will create a chilling effect. As such, despite the government's claims to the contrary, this chilling effect appears to be the bill's intended purpose. The Trudeau government wants to instill fear in people in order to control their speech.

As I wrote last September, Trudeau is pioneering a new way for governments to take control over the information

The fact that people disagree about what constitutes hate speech is at the heart of the problem. "Over and over," notes former ACLU President Nadine Strossen, "different decision-makers in the same country disagree about whether particular expression does or does not fall afoul of the pertinent 'hate speech' laws."

To enforce it all, the proposed law would create a new Digital Safety Commission with incredible powers to police content. "The breadth of powers is remarkable," noted legal analyst Michael Geist. The Commission's "rulings on making content inaccessible, investigation powers, hearings that under certain circumstances can be closed to the public, establishing regulations and codes of conduct, and the power to levy penalties up to 6% of global revenues of services caught by the law."

The Trudeau government spokesperson emphasized that Canadian laws allow the government to issue

Note to Globalist Predators: Rolling Protests Until You Surrender

By Elizabeth Nickson

I have captured on my hard drive several hundred incidents of farmers, truckers, rail workers, you name it, on the march in every country and every region in Europe. They are out by the tens of thousands, and they are staying out, rolling thunder up and down the roads, clogging up traffic, walling politicians in their homes, and dumping manure at every government building. In the U.K., right now, they are marshalling for a massive truck and tractor protest on the way to London. Paris is in trauma, all of France locked up on a rolling basis, by which I mean the police never know where it's going to happen next. Every country, Poland, Greece, Italy, Corsica, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Spain, is on fire.

Here's the witless Financial Times on February 23rd:

"It is a testament to how far political leaders and opinion formers have lost touch with agriculture that so few seem to have seen this coming. Governments that want to tackle climate change seem not to have thought through the effects on an industry that is facing rising production costs and falling global food prices."

Sorry, Camilla Cavendish (a more elish name you cannot imagine), you are way, way, way out of date. Call yourself a reporter? Honey, you are a typist for the Rothschilds.

The Financial Times is about eighteen months behind the times. What is happening in Europe runs far deeper and presages far more systematic change than a temporary pulling back on taxes and regulation.

Nope, we are removing your lamp from your lampstand until you submit. Or, to be precise:

"... repent and do the deeds you did at first; or else I am coming to you and will remove your lampstand out of its place—unless you repent."

Dammit.

This is why the farmers' revolt is significant:

John Dickenson's Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania were carried from town to town, printed again and again, read out aloud at town meetings, electrifying pre-Revolutionary America. Farmers, said Dickenson, and I paraphrase, are the basis of any culture. Anger them too much, and things change. Plus, they are not beholden to anyone; they can feed and house themselves and are the base of independence; from their secure houses, new ideas are nurtured. Finally, they have mastered inputs and outputs. A farmer knows when a culture is failing. And they are respected. It was why Stalin murdered the Kulaks, too uppity, too unpredictable.

Another thinker, Henry St. John, the Viscount Bolingbroke, a Tory, founded the Country Party in opposition to the Whig ascendancy, which he called the Court Party, where advancement was doled out via preference and bribery, not the virtue of an idea or proposal. Bolingbroke (unreadable now) said that the country was from where all good things came: ingenuity, creativity, problem-solving. It must be heard. Bolingbroke and his friends are credited with the invention of a Parliamentary opposition.

He was exiled for his trouble, his properties confiscated, his wife left him, and he spent the time in Paris alternating whooping it up—famous for running naked along the Champs-Élysées—and consulting for bonny Prince Charlie's daddy, James Stuart, who claimed the British throne. And fighting for his rights, Bolingbroke was eventually allowed home, ran for Parliament, and went on to challenge the Court party, unpacking the legislation until the special deals that bled the country were consigned to history. The subsequent economic boom produced a period of growth in Britain, leading to the Industrial Revolution. And to the American Revolution, because Bolingbroke was much-read by the American founders.

Sound familiar? Because here we are again. The World Economic Forum, in partnership with the United Nations, has divided up the world and said this goes here and that goes there, and "free trade" is everywhere, but we pick the winners and losers. The losers are the people of Western democracies, slated to be overrun, their history, traditions, and practices buried. Too uppity, too inconvenient.

Europe is, finally, on fire. In every country, farmers are on the roads, joined by truckers and rail workers. Sixty-nine percent of Germany, the most obedient population in the E.U., is on their side. Even little Corsica has its farmers out. This is just the beginning because farmers can come and go; they don't have "jobs," they have businesses, they are independent. In the last week of February, farmers started ripping up the fences outside the E.U.'s buildings with their backhoes. In France, farmers and truckers are walling government officials in their buildings. And while the specific complaint is Net-Zero and Europe's Green New Deal, everything is on the table, especially the floods of immigrants breaking small cities, towns, rural Europe's culture, traditions, and local economies.

Rishi Sunak, the globalist's globalist, has announced that he is not backing down. Macron was chased through a market last weekend, but he, too, is holding firm. Like Trudeau and the interloper Biden, they cling to power. These countries claim they have clean elections. I doubt it. The electoral reason for mass immigration is immigrant vote bundling via fast-tracking to permanent residency. It happens everywhere. People who barely speak the host country's language are told who to vote for by their community leaders, who distribute housing and benefits. Immigrants and migrants are sorted into swing districts where the cheat won't be noticed. Migrants in the U.S. are overwhelmingly sent to red (Republican) states.

In my opinion, in every single European country, elections are stolen via organized voter migration. I followed a politician friend who worked this angle and won, specifically an Attorney General of my province. This is why and how Trudeau clings to power—he has brought in 16 percent of the population in the last nine years, and many of them can vote. It is why Sunak and Macron won't back down. They're good. They're protected. Their election, despite the rise of populism, is not in question. If Keir Starmer wins, it's because the WEFers have decided he can.

Bureaucracy collides with food every single time. In the words of Morgan Ody, a vegetable farmer from France, and Vincent Delobel, a Walloon goat dairy farmer:

"Since the 1980s, various regulations that ensured fair prices for European farmers have been dismantled. The E.U. put all its faith in free trade agreements, which placed all the world's farmers in competition with each other, encouraging them to produce at the lowest possible price at the cost of their own incomes and growing debt."

And that is why we are here. The winners in the food game are the consolidators, the bureaucrats who decide food prices and, of course, the markets, and finally, the hedge funds. It is a case of taking from the poor and giving to the rich.

FREEDOM WINS!

The Tennessee Bill, SB2691 (HB2063), would ban the government from engaging in "geoengineering experiments" and "intentionally dispersing chemicals into the atmosphere" in the state. Similar legislation has been introduced in at least six other states.

- Bad news for COVID-19 vaccine manufacturers. A new bill would allow Americans to sue COVID vaccine manufacturers directly. The Let Injured Americans Be Legally Empowered (LIABLE) Act would strip COVID-19 vaccine manufacturers in the US of liability protections, enabling Americans who took vaccines that were misleadingly promoted and federally mandated to pursue civil litigation for their injuries.
- Arbitrator James Hayes has ruled that nine Ontario nurses, dismissed for not receiving two COVID-19 vaccinations, should be reinstated as their termination was deemed "unreasonable." Hayes wrote, "Their employee rights may not be ignored," and stated that the policy should have allowed for the option of unpaid leave.
- Nova Scotia Health Authority (NSHA) backs down on its COVID-19 vaccine mandate, offering those who lost their jobs the opportunity to return to work. In their statement, NSHA said, "This change reflects our commitment to respecting the choices and autonomy of our staff members while also considering the evolving landscape of COVID-19 in its endemic phase."
- The National Health Services (NHS) of England announces that children will no longer be prescribed puberty blockers at gender identity clinics. After reviewing the damaging effects of the hormones on children, the NHS said banning puberty blockers is "in the best interests of kids." Puberty blockers inhibit normal development of puberty, such as facial hair and breast development, and cause other health issues, such as weakened bones. Health officials said the government "welcomes this landmark decision by the NHS" and healthcare should be evidence-based to protect the "best interests of the child."

- The crown attorney has withdrawn all criminal charges against William Laframboise, the alleged leader of the Windsor/Ambassador Bridge Freedom Convoy in 2022. Laframboise was facing criminal mischief charges.
- Idaho Senate Bill 1245, nicknamed the "Pesticide Immunity Bill" was shot down despite intense lobbying by the Bayer (Monsanto) Corporation. The Bill would have given pesticide manufacturers immunity against liability for EPA-sanctioned pesticides. This legislation would have been similar to the 1986 Act, which gave vaccine manufacturers immunity against liability for injury and death caused by their products. We can all thank a coalition of advocacy groups, farmers, and other individuals for standing up to this sham legislation.
- Trust in "experts" is on the decline among Americans, according to a recent national telephone and online survey conducted by Rasmussen Reports. The findings reveal that, when it comes to making healthcare decisions, a mere 35% of American adults feel confident in relying on advice from "experts." In contrast, 58% of people emphasize the importance of conducting their own research before making such decisions.

- Newfoundland fisheries have won their battle for freedom! After protesting for weeks outside the Confederation Building in St. John's for a free and open fishery market (i.e., not to be restricted to selling only to the large corporations in the area), fishermen reached a deal with the NL government that allows catch to be sold to outside buyers.
- After a group of doctors, including Dr. Paul Marik, took the FDA to court for spreading lies about the efficacy and safety of ivermectin for the treatment of COVID-19, the FDA settled and agreed to remove all social media posts and directives that claim we should not use ivermectin to treat or prevent COVID-19. Dr. Marik utilized ivermectin in his COVID-19 treatment protocol as Chief of Pulmonary and Critical Care Medicine at Eastern Virginia Medical School and Director of the Intensive Care Unit at Sentara Norfolk General Hospital. Marik was made to remove the protocol from the school's servers while Sentara issued a memorandum to hospitals telling them to stop using ivermectin for COVID-19, citing the FDA.
- More than four times more parents are against vaccinating their children compared to pre-pandemic times, a new Canadian survey by the Angus Reid Institute shows. Canadian parents opposing the vaccination of their children rose from 4% in 2019 to 17% in 2024. The survey also found that 29% of parents expressed skepticism surrounding the science of vaccines, and 34% feared the risk of significant side effects. The survey also indicated a decline in the percentage of Canadian parents who believe vaccinations should be mandatory for school children, dropping from 70% in 2019 to 55% in 2024.
- Bill banning chemtrails passes in Tennessee Senate.

Confessions of a Tesla Owner: The Real Story

By Geraldine Power

In February 2024, Hilary Mueller wrote a letter to the editor of the Inverness Oran sharing her countless negative experiences over three years of owning an electric vehicle (EV-2021 Long Range Tesla). She felt compelled to respond to Paul Strome’s article that touted the benefits of EVs.

Hilary and her husband are organic farmers, who have been living in a fully off-grid, solar-powered home (in Nova Scotia, Canada) for the last eight years. They were initially enthusiastic advocates of the EV, even attending a Greta Thunberg-inspired climate change march in Halifax back in 2019. She admits: “I feel slightly embarrassed about sharing this so publicly because I truly feel that we got duped by clever and persuasive EV/doomsday marketing.”

Even though the car was more expensive up front, she was optimistic because it only cost $14 to “fill up” at home with a Level 2 charger. That would more than make up for the initial cost over time, considering the price of gas. “No pesky oil changes and Tesla’s titanium shield under the car means no repairs due to rust.” A trip to Halifax required an 18-minute stop at the Enfield Supercharger, but they looked at it as a break. Excitement ultimately waned and, by the end of the first year, they regretted their decision.

“The undulating, electric hum while the car charges for seven hours permeates our entire home and yard. Is that healthy?” Additionally, everyone had to “exit the vehicle ... at the Supercharger because it feels very unhealthy to be in such a high-voltage environment while it’s charging. Rain, shine, snow, or sleet – everybody out!” To add insult to injury, she learned that the battery life decreases with every charge and that charging to 100% was not even advised – only to 80% as a precaution! They would later learn the toll that harsh weather would have on battery life and charging.

Fast forward to 2022, after one year they could still make it to Sydney and back if they did not make any detours. “Having to stop in Baddeck for two hours to juice up just to make the 40-minute journey home doesn’t make much sense.” However, they would need to stop at “the Enfield Supercharger when going to Halifax, but no detours. Stick to the highway or else.” This was all proving to be quite the challenge, but they continued to soldier on and be the true environmentalists that they wanted to be; it wasn’t getting easier. By Christmas of 2023, the difficulties were becoming even more apparent. With a 2.5-year-old car, headed to “the Valley” and an outside temperature of 5°C, they worried they would not even reach the Supercharger. When they did arrive, it was almost dark and the entire family (with dogs, so unable to go inside) had to exit the vehicle and wander around in the cold in Truro, for 1.5 hours to get enough charge to reach their destination because “staying in the car while it’s charging feels like every hair on your body is getting charged up too.” So, once they were on their way again, realizing that “the wall plug at Grandma’s takes days to charge the car and we can’t believe how poorly the car is performing,” they stop to charge up ONE MORE time “just in case” at New Minas Supercharger.

Charging up in town before leaving, “everyone out into the cold” during the charge and repeating the same process again with kids and dogs, “windy and half raining, half snowing” for 35 more minutes shortly after, they barely made it home with six percent battery power. Why on earth would a vehicle that performs so unreliably be something we are encouraged to live with? This is inconvenient and frankly, quite nerve-wracking.

Hilary recounts the story of how one day in January 2024, she was driving with her husband, anxiously looking for a charging station. They finally arrived in Enfield before running out of energy, but their relief was short-lived as they quickly discovered that “Enfield supercharger is down. Neither the car nor Telsa phone app notified him; 9:00 p.m. on a Sunday. No indication of when/if the charger will turn on again. Car is at three percent. Not enough power to keep the heat on, let alone drive to a motel. Other EV drivers there are all cursing their cars and their decisions.” They waited an hour for the station to restart and another hour to charge up! Two hours out in the cold!

February wasn’t proving to be much better. One day, returning from the airport, her husband drove the EV, while Hilary drove their 2012 Toyota Matrix, the more reliable car, because she had to detour (to Antigonish) and pick up their dogs on the way home, which was too much to expect from the “Long Range Tesla.” Despite the detour and stopping to collect the dogs, she made it home before her husband, since he had a one-hour stop to charge the EV. “It takes longer to charge an old battery... My husband finally made it home... with the heat turned off, because he was trying to conserve power. Made it home with six percent.”

Hilary maintains that their EV was in standard working condition and had no issues (other than those common to every EV). All of the problems were simply a result of how a

Tesla performs (normally) along with the added stress of Canadian winter conditions and always wondering if you will make it to your next destination. “This is what range anxiety looks like! It is not, as Paul Strome so kindly put it, ‘for those drivers who have trouble paying attention to their fuel gauge.’ Range anxiety means constantly paying attention to your fuel gauge and crossing your fingers and toes, hoping you’re going to make it!” Why switch to a mode of transportation that is so stressful and unreliable? Hilary ends, referencing Paul’s letter:

“The February 14th letter features all of the dealership, government, and activist talking points. None of it is based on the real-life experience of a rural EV owner. The ‘official range’ of EVs is not based in reality. Only on the first day out of the factory (if it’s sunny, with no wind, temps between 15-20°C, on a straight stretch road with no hills) would our car ever live up to its range expectations. Speaking as a former climate change activist and current EV driver, I can only see EVs working if you live in a big city and never plan on leaving that big city. The last thing we should be pushing for is to phase out internal combustion engine vehicles by 2035 in Canada. Yes, we absolutely have to take better care of our planet, but EVs make zero sense in the real world.”

Canada to Incorporate Social Scores in Banking

By Martin Armstrong

The Canadian banking system is set to be radicalized by open banking framework. Proponents are framing this as a way for banks to easily share information and access user data. The truth of the matter is that this is an opportunity to merge social standings with banking to provide government complete control over our finances.

The organization Open Banking Excellence, a World Bank partner that originated in the UK, claims that it will host all of a bank’s relevant needs in one place. The organization, which has reached 40 countries, aims to “create exceptional platforms and content that promotes knowledge sharing, new thinking, and partnerships within the industry – catalysing the adoption of Open Finance and Data for better financial inclusion worldwide.”

“It’s about having that fairer, more inclusive, more open society,” said Helen Child, founder of Open Banking Excellence. Open Society, well, that does sound familiar. Why is there a need for inclusivity and fairness in banking when it should come down to numbers? “It drives financial inclusion,” she added. “It’s democratizing data.”

Data. That will be worth more than gold as we move forward with a cashless society. There is no easier way to control the masses than to control their access to money, their ability to buy, trade, and freely move about. The Canadian Press outlined the true motive in plain sight: “One of the biggest areas of growth is in credit assessments. Under open banking, lenders could directly access an individual’s banking data, so they can look beyond credit scores. Consumers can also use it to build their credit scores, for example, by proving reliable rent payments.”

Looking beyond credit scores equates to determining if a person is fit to participate in the global economy based on their personal views. Look at what happened to Nigel Farage. He never committed a crime or did anything to warrant what many have called the “Farage fiasco.” Nigel was suddenly debanked by Coutts & Co., and was unable to access any of his checking or savings accounts. His credit cards were deactivated. He was unable to participate in society without a moment’s notice.

Farage did his due diligence and found that there were countless people who experienced the same financial attack carried out by the banks on behalf of the government.

This is a widespread phenomenon. We saw it happening commonly during COVID lockdowns, where users were not permitted to access places if their digital COVID passports failed. In China, when banks were facing a liquidity crisis, the CCP (Chines Communist Party) simply denied depositors the right to access their money and blocked them from physically accessing their banks. The government successfully prevented a bank run. We saw a few celebrities debanked from the system for voicing unpopular opinions without any legal proceedings or crimes committed.

Canada is one of many nations hoping to use unofficial social scores to control the masses. All of these actions are setting the stage for how CBDC (Central Bank Digital Currency) will operate, as a collective network containing everyone’s personal data and accounts. Governments have already begun debanking individuals and these steps will make it increasingly easier to force the masses to bow down and relinquish all control to the almighty government.

It is Not Our Fault We Believed the Lies

By Michael Darmody

Have you begun to wonder about what is really happening in the world today?

We are each unique and, at unique paces, we have become aware of different emerging facts around the Covid issue at different times. But once awakened to truths, we share similar emotions: disbelief, skepticism, and anger, followed by the resolve to push back, fight for freedom, and hold the perpetrators accountable.

Sometimes, we experience guilt, remorse, and perhaps shame or embarrassment at being duped.

If so, we should not be so hard on ourselves! Instead, we must show compassion and understanding for each other about being fooled by the audacious lies they have repeatedly told us.

For the last 200 years, we have built and come to trust the institutions of government, education, health services, and banking and financial regulators. We came to believe in and trust the medical profession, the scientists who dedicate their lives to researching cures and advances for the human condition, the educational system, religious organizations, financial accountancy, and an independent media mandated to scrutinize the powerful and to unearth scams and lies. In the 1900s, we could live with what we thought was a reasonably large degree of freedom, fairness, and opportunity within the broader social system.

Little did we know, nor could we have known, that behind the facade of order and progress, a small, powerful group of people was orchestrating a plan to take global control. And yet, that is exactly what happened. What is now the format of the World Economic Forum (WEF) quietly partnered with the United Nations (UN) to create and implement programs designed to achieve global control of society.

By now, you may have learned (or are learning) that there was no pandemic, that the virus was a lab-created bioweapon funded by Anthony Fauci’s National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) agency, and that the so-called vaccines were not vaccines at all. They were not “safe and effective,” and neither social distancing, masking, nor lockdowns were science-based. Many more falsehoods were spread, with some still emerging.

So, if you feel discouraged, sheepish, or guilty about “arriving late to the party,” please don’t beat yourself up! These unprecedented and widespread lies fooled many of us at the outset of our awakening journey. Be kind to yourself and take comfort in knowing that you are in a large and fast-growing community of people who are aware and committed to pushing back against this tyranny together. You have a family of kindred souls.

A quote attributed to Mark Twain: “It is easier to fool people than to convince them they have been fooled.” No one likes to feel that they were manipulated or fooled. It is normal to feel mixed emotions as you begin to pull on the thread of truth, but if you continue, you will soon feel free in the knowledge of truth.

A saying with origins in the 1600s: “Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me.” We have ALL been fooled about many things for a very long time. The silver lining of the past four years is our great awakening to those lies. THEY LIED. And we know it!

Now that you’re among your new community of like-minded freedom promoters, you can continue to discover the full truth. Together, we will end the mad tyranny and ensure we never get fooled twice.

For Those Who Cannot Imagine

By Anonymous

For those who cannot imagine what it’s like to be vaxxed and living with that once the evidence is available, I can answer you.

It’s a day-to-day grieving and cellular remorse. Many of us were just living our daily lives without any idea about the WEF, UN, or WHO. Movies showed scenes of satanic practices and we had no idea about blood-drinking celebrities.

We trusted our doctors (I had mine for over 25 years), we knew our government lied at election times, and we voted the best we could based on the BS presented to us. We went about our lives innocently, working, raising kids, and babysitting grandkids, and many had not one person in our circles to warn us of the dangers. We didn’t even know we had to “do our own research.” Unbelievable as that may seem, it’s absolutely true, which shocks others. So, off we went and had the shots.

Now, us “sheeples,” as we are all referred to, are dying in our millions, some suddenly, while some are destined to slow malingering pain-filled deaths. But we are dying, and ironically, we are the evidence—the proof you will all use later.

Some—I wish I knew the percentages—argued with others who knew the dangers, and words and actions hurt both sides. That is the greatest weapon of the psyop—it’s actually greater than the vax itself.

There is a level of toxic hatred and gloating online that condemns the vaxxed to silence in regards to seeking help. I see it in the forums—how they are abused by total strangers—so we stay silent and die alone and unforgiven for our naivety and fear.

But back to the point in question.

IT IS HELL—living with the knowledge that I took three of them, that my wonderful, kind, hardworking husband took four, that our children and grandchildren had them—it haunts me, it breaks my soul, it has destroyed me, simply because we were naive.

My husband and I were already done when a cousin contacted me through messenger after seeing a post about my rapid decline in health and asked me questions. I then spoke to my sons, but it was too late. They had been done already.

It’s reading endless detox protocols and wondering IF they truly work, or IF they, too, are part of the BS, because how would we ever know, since there is no long-term proof?

It’s endless medical tests that come back “normal” and you just know and feel the changes in your body.

It’s seeing the videos of the “calamari clots” and reading about graphene microblades slicing up veins, and spikes adhering like velcro to tissues and organs.

It’s the breathlessness and palpitations on the slightest exertion that doctors can’t explain.

It’s the “knowing” that it was for nothing, though we believed it was for the best of intentions.

Borrowed $7 trillion for Climate Change Projects

The entire environmental business has been captured, becoming yet another way to loot the public purse. The U.S. has borrowed $7 trillion over the past three years; 25% of that money went to “climate change” projects, all of which are simply garbage. This is theft.

The most important thing to know about “the environment,” the country, and rural regions, is that every place is different. The soil is different; the water, rains, and winds are different; even the air is different. The people have different and specific talents, and their culture grows first from the land, from the soil. In order to win against the specific nutrition created by specific regions, slaughter individual competition, and kill local cultures, the food giants have corrupted products to the point where obesity is killing us faster than any other condition.

I challenge you to really look at your fellow citizens. Does anyone look healthy? The chemical pollution of America’s food means that most of it is profoundly toxic. The Bio-Pharma lobby provides 50 percent of the FDA’s funds.

The lure of today’s Court party and the sickening culture of elite consumption is dying. All over the world, in countless places, people are innovating the food supply, healing the earth one field and forest at a time. There are little fires everywhere, but this time, they are connected in a giant web, like mushroom mycelia, the substrate of the earth, about to rise in yet another throwing off of a corrupt Court party.

Who Owns You? Health Canada?

An Update on Your Ownership

By Shawn Buckley

Ownership means control. We own things so that we have control over them. Black’s Law Dictionary defines ownership as “the complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim.” The issue of who owns your body is going to be an interesting legal topic in the following years. When living organisms such as plants contain a genetic modification, the patent holder of that genetic modification has a property interest in the plant. So, if the pollen from a genetically modified crop transfers the genetic modification to an adjacent farmer’s field, the patent holder of that genetic modification has a property interest in the infected crop. When a human has their DNA modified by mRNA vaccines, does the patent holder of the modification have a property interest in the human? Likely, but the ramifications of such property interests are yet to be explored by the Courts.

The legal area where ownership over another’s body has been sorted out, is the area of slavery. For example, when slavery was allowed in the U.S., there were laws governing who had rights over the slave’s body. In other words, there were ownership laws. Slaves have, until now, been the only class of persons who did not have control over their bodies. They did not have control because they did not own their bodies. Slaves have been the only class of people that could not decide how they were going to treat themselves when they were sick or how they were going to prevent illness. In this way, slaves are like livestock. They have no choice when it comes to medical treatment.

Very soon, we are all going to learn what it is like to be slaves in that we will have no choice when it comes to medical treatment. The entity that will get to choose our medical treatments is Health Canada. It flows from this that Health Canada has the power of ownership over us.

There should be nothing more important to you than having control over your body. There should be nothing more important than having the right to choose your medical treatments. You are in the process of losing this right. You are in the process of losing control over your own body.

You are losing ownership over your body so that Health Canada can protect a different type of property: intellectual property. Our drug laws are designed to protect intellectual property rights (patents). They are not there to protect health. Here is how it works:

First, the government defines the term “drug” so broadly that it includes anything used for a therapeutic purpose. So, for example, even water is a “drug” if used to treat or to prevent dehydration.

Second, the government makes it illegal to sell a “drug” without government approval. With these two tricks, it becomes illegal to use any treatment the government doesn’t give you permission to use.

Third, the government makes it so expensive to get government approval that only drugs with intellectual property rights (patents) can get through the drug approval process. The process to get approval to treat a serious health condition can cost over a billion dollars. Less expensive applications still cost hundreds of millions of dollars. Companies only try to get drugs with patents through this process. If they are successful, they can charge high prices because the patent gives them a monopoly over the drug. You can only patent a chemical drug. You cannot patent a natural remedy. The effect of this distinction is that, in Canada, it is only legal to treat serious health conditions with chemical drugs.

What is changing is that Health Canada will now be making it so costly to get approval to treat moderate and minor health conditions, that only chemical drugs with patents will be able to afford to get through this process. The effect of this change is that, in Canada, it will only be legal to treat any health condition with chemical drugs.

This change will bring about a transfer of ownership in your body to Health Canada. Remember, ownership is about control. Whoever controls your body owns it. The most important control over your body is deciding how you will treat and prevent illness. That control is moving to Health Canada. Soon, your only treatment options will be chemical drugs Health Canada has approved for you. You will be the same as a slave. The only treatment options available to you will be those that your master, Health Canada, grants you.

Although this is a tremendous advancement for intellectual property rights, it will have a drastic effect on your health. Currently, over 70% of Canadians regularly take natural health products, because they work. Many of us are only alive because of natural remedies. Many more of us successfully manage serious health conditions with them because the Health Canada approved chemical drugs were not working or had intolerable side effects. Up to now, Canadians have been enjoying ownership over their bodies by making their own choice as to how to treat and prevent illness. Now, Health Canada is taking away this essential freedom.

Health Canada is implementing a policy called the Self-Care Framework (the “SCF”), the public goal of which is to impose the chemical drug regulations on natural health products. This imposition will take natural health products away from Canadians, who will be left with only chemical drugs as treatments. This is Health loss of my husband and family.

It’s the pain felt by the name-calling and ongoing online abuse.

I may be a sheeple to some, and cop endless abuse online for speaking up with my truth, but that will not stop me. Not every vaxxed person acted like an “A-hole” when approached by someone who cared enough to take that risk. Yet, we have ALL been tarred with that one brush, and it’s there that humanity devolved even further. And “they” did not have to do a thing except sit back and watch us fall apart.

Canada’s goal.

One of the changes the SCF will bring about will be to require small natural remedy companies to pay the same fees that the large pharmaceutical companies pay. Many companies will go out of business and we will lose their products. The products that do remain will increase in price, taking them away from economically-disadvantaged Canadians. This change alone will likely make it impossible for homeopathic, naturopathic, and traditional Chinese doctors, whom many of us rely on, to access most of the remedies they use.

Companies with patented products (chemical drugs) will have a monopoly, enabling them to dominate the market, recover their costs, and make a profit. What are we and our natural health practitioners to do when we have no natural treatments?

We have to band together to stop Health Canada. Last year, Health Canada snuck into the Federal Budget Bill changes to the law that imposed penalties intended for large pharmaceutical companies on health care practitioners and small natural remedy companies. The fines increased from $5,000 to $5,000,000. No health care practitioner or natural remedy company can withstand these large penalties.

MP Blaine Calkins has introduced Bill C-368 to reverse these changes so that penalties on small companies and practitioners are reasonable. Second Reading for this Bill in Parliament is set for April 18, 2024. It is crucial that Bill C-368 passes second reading so that it can be analyzed in Parliament’s Standing Committee on Health. We need you to put pressure on your MP to support this Bill. The Natural Products Protection Association (the “NHPPA”) has both a petition and an email campaign to make it easy for you to give your support. Go to nhppa.org to sign the petition and to send an email to your MP.

To stop Health Canada’s efforts to take control of your body, you have to get involved. You cannot afford to lose your right to decide how to treat and how to prevent illness. For many of us, this is a do or die situation. We have to stand together. Please get involved with the NHPPA so that we can act together. First, go to nhppa.org and subscribe to the Newsletter. This will inform you about campaigns and initiatives you can participate in. You can learn about events and volunteering opportunities. Second, fill in the volunteer form. Third, support financially. We are fighting rich and powerful interests and to overcome their influence, we need to create the largest citizen rebellion in Canadian history. We need your support. We cannot do it without you.

This is a tremendous opportunity for Canadians to make Parliament responsive to us again. There is frustration from the Covid experience over governments being unresponsive to us. The Trucker Convoy became the largest protest in Canadian history. For 24 days, not a single member of the Trudeau Government would meet with the Truckers. Rather, the Government used the 24 days to organize a military-style police force to assault us. We have to get Parliament listening to us again. This is likely our best opportunity. Other than the Trucker Convoy, the two largest Citizen-led movements in my lifetime have been to protect access to natural remedies. Canadians are passionate about protecting their right to natural remedies, and we have an opportunity to use that passion to get Parliament responding to us again.

The Globalist’s Secret Message

By James Corbett

Psssst. You. Yeah, you! Wanna know a secret? OK, but you gotta promise not to tell anyone. Here it is: the inbred eugenicist elitist globalist technocrats that presume to rule over humanity are speaking in subtle code. If you listen extra carefully and you think very hard about it and learn to read between the lines, you just might discover the super secret message that the They/Them/Those of the New World Order agenda have carefully embedded in their public statements.

What, you don’t believe me? OK, then let’s take a look at some examples and I’ll help you decode these cryptic messages.

The Secret Message

Are you ready? Let’s see if you can discern what these would-be controllers of humanity are really saying:

“In the event that I am reincarnated, I would like to return as a deadly virus, to contribute something to solving overpopulation.” —Prince Philip, Interview

“The most merciful thing that the large family does to one of its infant members is to kill it.” —Margaret Sanger, Woman and the New Race.

“Countless people, from maharajas to millionaires and from pukkha sahibs to pretty ladies, will hate the new world order, be rendered unhappy by the frustration of their passions and ambitions through its advent and will die protesting against it.” —H. G. Wells, The New World Order

“And there’s too many of us, and most of us are living incorrectly. If we had a much smaller population, and over time we could have an ethic where we had only one child, and over maybe 300 or 400 years we could cut back to 250 million – 350 million people.” —Ted Turner, Interview

“In searching for a common enemy against whom we can unite, we came up with the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine and the like, would fit the bill. In their totality and their interactions these phenomena do constitute a common threat which must be confronted by everyone together. But in designating these dangers as the enemy, we fall into the trap, which we have already warned readers about, namely mistaking symptoms for causes. All these dangers are caused by human intervention in natural processes, and it is only through changed attitudes and behaviour that they can be overcome. The real enemy then is humanity itself.” —Alexander King and Bertrand Schneider, The First Global Revolution: A report by the Council of the Club of Rome

“Professor Pianka said the Earth as we know it will not survive without drastic measures. Then, and without presenting any data to justify this number, he asserted that the only feasible solution to saving the Earth is to reduce the population to 10 percent of the present number. He then showed solutions for reducing the world’s population in the form of a slide depicting the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. War and famine would not do, he explained. Instead, disease offered the most efficient and fastest way to kill the billions that must soon die if the population crisis is to be solved. Pianka then displayed a slide showing rows of human skulls, one of which had red lights flashing from its eye sockets.” —Forrest Mim’s account of a speech by University of Texas evolutionary ecologist Eric Pianka

“An ABC website has been accused of portraying farmers and forestry workers as evil and telling kids how much carbon they can produce before they die.” —ABC website tells kids when they should die

“To date, there has been no serious attempt in Western countries to use laws to control excessive population growth, although there exists ample authority under which population growth could be regulated. For example, under the United States Constitution, effective population-control programs could be enacted under the clauses that empower Congress to appropriate funds to provide for the general welfare and to regulate commerce, or under the equal-protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Such laws constitutionally could be very broad. Indeed, it has been concluded that compulsory population-control laws, even including laws requiring compulsory abortion, could be sustained under the existing Constitution if the population crisis became sufficiently severe to endanger the society.” —Paul Ehrlich et al., Ecoscience

“To put it bluntly: in earlier times, it was easier to control one million people than to physically kill one million people; today, it is infinitely easier to kill one million people than to control one million people.” —Zbigniew Brzezinski, “Major Foreign Policy Challenges for the Next US President.”

Just Kidding

So, did you catch the subtle message that the crafty cabal carefully coded into their public communiqués?

No? Oh, OK, you got me! There’s no secret message. It’s right there in the open.

For the completely clueless, the points that pop up again and again in the oligarchs’ oratory are:

- Humanity is the enemy.

- We must reduce the population.
- Billions of commoners must die that we and our progeny may live.

That’s it. It’s right there in black and white in their major publications, security memoranda, white papers, and speeches. Heck, it’s even engraved in stone . . . or at least it used to be until some enterprising individuals turned that stone into rubble. The point is: there is no secret message. There’s only a completely out-in-the-open one.

And, once you truly understand this message and the ruthless, psychopathic, eugenicist, elitist, anti-human mindset of the kakistocrats who promulgate it, you can finally make sense of world events.

Why is the environmental movement stewarded over by murderous, human-hating wackos who desire to see billions of people die? Because the conservation movement (and all of the mainstream environmental organizations that grew out of that movement) was pioneered by murderous, human-hating eugenicists and funded by the eugenicist royals who wanted to keep their beautiful natural vistas clear of the riff-raff scurrying around beneath them.

Why do nation after nation appear to be in a race to the bottom, implementing policies that will actively hinder the productivity of their own populations and making it more and more difficult for those on the lowest rung of the economic ladder to eke out a subsistence living on the corporate-governmental fascist plantation that we call the developed world? And why is it now increasingly in vogue for governments to offer “medically assisted dying” as their “solution” to the strain and stress of this deliberately degraded world? Because those same governments are stewarded over by elitist eugenicists who hate you and want you dead, of course.

And why do The $cience™ (a registered trademark of the AstroPfizerDernica corporation, as we all know) and academia and the mainstream press and Hollywood and every other pusher of establishment propaganda mindlessly parrot anti-human narratives? Because they are funded and populated by the same elitist, eugenicist, human-hating depopulationists, naturally.

As I say, once you see the “super secret” message in the psychopaths’ public statements for what it is, none of the actions they take are particularly difficult to figure out.

And yet, when you spell out this blindingly obvious reality to the masses, you get massive pushback. It seems they have so internalized the “humans are a cancer on the planet” meme that they’ve been duped into believing that this idea is their own original thought and that they are somehow brave and transgressive for articulating it.

Which leads to the question:

Why, Then, Do People Not See This Message?

There’s a bit of advice that gets passed around online these days: “When someone shows you who they are, believe them.”

Just type that phrase into your search engine of choice and you’ll discover two things: firstly, the quote is commonly attributed to Maya Angelou; and secondly, it is oft-cited relationship advice that is posted in Reddit fora and self-help blogs and other places where one is likely to encounter trite, pop culture truisms.

Like so many of those pop psy clichés, it appeals because it’s seemingly simple but actually profound. As Maya Angelou explains, people will sometimes tell us that they’re mean or they’re crazy. Our first response in such cases is often one of reassurance: “Oh, you’re not

Are We In For a False Flag Alien Invasion?

By Lynn Davis

In the aftermath of one of the largest and most destructive psyops in human history, the Covid-19 “pandemic,” those of us who comprehend the underlying motives of that small but powerful group of beings responsible for the perpetration of such an event are left wondering, “what next might they have in store?”

Shortly before his death in 1977, Wernher von Braun, the Nazi rocket scientist who became leader of the US space program through Project Paperclip, successfully predicted the War on Terror (which began with 911), then the fear of Third World Countries (we now call them Rogue Nations like Iran and North Korea), then the fear of an asteroid strike (which was promoted in the early years of this century), and then the last card to be played—a false alien invasion.¹

Around the same time, late 1970s, Ben Rich, the director of US aerospace corporation Lockheed’s Skunkworks stated, “We already have the means to travel among the stars, but these technologies are locked up in black projects and it would take an act of God to ever get them out to benefit humanity.”²

Goodness knows there is enough recorded history surrounding the UFO phenomenon to choke a horse! Consider ancient cave drawings depicting what look like spacemen, Renaissance paintings with airborne objects hovering in the background, Sumerian clay tablets that tell the story of off-world visitors engineering humans to become slaves, the stories in the Book of Enoch, and the Bible’s tales of Elijah in the heavenly chariot, fallen angels, and the Nephilim.

There is no shortage of information on the UFO phenomenon. Hundreds of books, articles, movies, and television shows have been written and produced on the subject, and whether intentionally or not, all accounts have served to indoctrinate the public into the notion of the presence of extraterrestrial craft and life forms.

From the late 1800s “air ship” accounts, to the first reports in the 1940s of “flying saucers” by Kenneth Arnold, and the Roswell, New Mexico crash of the same year, to the Robertson Panel, the Condon Report, and Project Blue Book UFO investigations, to the 1952 UFO two-day fly-over at the White House, Washington, DC and the Arizona Phoenix Lights incident, to the Betty and Barney Hill and Travis Walton abductions in the 1960s and 70s, and the hundreds of thousands of civilian sightings of UFOs on record at UFO reporting centres such as MUFON and NUFORC.

The phenomenon does not belong exclusively to the United States. Canada has her own history of UFO sightings, crashes, and abductions, as does every nation worldwide. The little known fact is that since the 1940s, the UFO file has been given the highest top secret national security status.³

Before 2017, the mere mention of UFO, crash retrievals, non-human biologics (alien bodies), and back-engineering of alien craft drew anywhere from odd looks and dismissal to downright caustic remarks from those who simply would not consider the possibility of the existence of any type of intelligence originating from beyond this world. It was fiction, plain and simple, a form of entertainment, and surely not something we needed to seriously consider or even worry about.

Well, times have changed, and that change began on December 17, 2017, when The New York Times published an article stating that the Pentagon has been conducting UFO research programs, that the US Navy has been experiencing UFO (now called UAP – Unidentified Aerial Phenomena) travelling alongside and around ships, and that the US Department of Defence is taking these situations very seriously.

Since 2017 and The New York Times shocking disclosure, we have had a slow build of the UAP narrative seeping into the public domain. It’s been a roller coaster ride like nothing we’ve ever experienced. Videos of UAP flying at tremendous speeds in and out of the ocean or hovering over US Navy ships, have been released for public viewing. In July of 2023, the US Congress held a hearing on the subject and entertained “whistleblowers” such as US Intelligence officer David Grusch, along with retired US Navy pilot David Fravor and former US Navy fighter pilot Ryan Graves, all testifying under oath their experiences with UAP while employed in US intelligence and the military.

The National Disclosure Authorization Act of 2024 includes setting up a UAP file in the US National Archives,⁴ while falling short of passing legislation that would mandate US aerospace corporations to come clean with their advanced “alien” technologies. Congressmen and congresswomen, such as Tim Burchett and Anna Paulina Luna, are pushing for full disclosure of back-engineered alien technology, while some Senators continue to push back. Undoubtedly, there are secrets to be kept and much, much money involved. The US government continues its game of hide-and-seek and monopoly at the same time.

But if you’ve been paying attention to the narrative, you’ll notice an underlying theme growing in intensity: “We know they’re here, we don’t know exactly where they come from or what their intentions are, and we must consider them a threat to national security.” We hear this over and over again from government, from independent researchers, and journalists. In my mind, all this begs the question, “Why now?”

For almost a century, and especially since the 1940’s post war era, all information pertaining to the UAP file was tightly controlled and kept secret by the US government. The Canadian government has followed suit, and is still not commenting on revelations south of the border. Why, all of a sudden in 2017, was the cat let out of the bag?

President John F. Kennedy created the US Continuity of Government (COG) program on February 12, 1962.

What is the EESystem and how does it work?

The EESystem generates a hyper-healthy environment that enables the body to naturally heal itself. Individuals have reported testimonials of improved well-being such as enhanced energy levels, sleep, reduced pain, and so much more!

The EESystem utilizes two major components: bio-scalar energy and bio-photonics. A field engine system generates multiple bioactive energy fields (located in the black boxes behind the screens). The screens create a collision of photons (light) that the body absorbs, akin to absorbing sunlight! This is known as color therapy.

In 2022, Matt Walsh from The Daily Wire, delved into the question “What is a Woman?” in his documentary that went viral with over 177 million views on Twitter. I found his journey to be quite disturbing as he tries to get answers to questions that generations long before us never knew they needed to ask. Personally, being a woman myself, which is an adult female with XX chromosomes, I feel the concept of womanhood has been under continuous attack as biological males encroach upon spaces and rights that women have fought tirelessly for decades to secure.

The erosion of our identity as women and the mockery made of our experiences from those like Dylan Mulvaney, have become an injustice that cannot be ignored. Women have persevered through countless struggles to assert their rights and demand equality for centuries. From the right to vote in public elections to reproductive rights, we have marched, protested, and sacrificed much to establish and forge our path in society today. Yet, in a cruel twist of fate, the very essence of womanhood is now being undermined by those who seek to erase our unique experiences and replace them with a distorted version of reality.

One need only look at the absurdity of biological males pretending to menstruate, use tampons, and infiltrate women’s sports and private spaces to see the extent of this mockery. The notion that calling mothers “birthing persons” and “breast feeders” somehow promotes inclusivity is not only absurd but deeply insulting to the sacrifices and struggles of women throughout history.

Where are the feminists who once stood at the forefront of the fight for women’s rights? Why have so many retreated into silence, cowed by the fear of being labeled as bigots, racists, or transphobes? The deafening silence of those who claim to champion women’s rights in the face of such blatant erasure speaks volumes about the state of modern feminism. I want to be clear, biological men cannot have babies. It is women who bear the burden of childbirth and nurture the next generation. Women are the ones who keep society alive and populated, and our experiences as women are unique and irre-

The stated purpose of COG was to shield the essential infrastructure of the US government from destruction, permitting its continued operation and authority in a time of crisis, or in a time of an exceptional catastrophic event within the US. In such a scenario, all administrative powers of the US President are placed on the back burner, and command comes from specialized military units. Essentially, all US citizens would be under Martial Law.

environment—spreading disinformation and demanding censorship—that is similar but different to efforts we are seeing in places like California, Australia, and New Zealand.

People across the Western world were rightly alarmed when Trudeau, in February 2022, invoked the Emergencies Act for the first time in Canadian history and froze bank accounts of people who had donated to the “Freedom Convoy” protest led by truckers demanding an end to Covid-19 vaccine mandates. Trudeau justified such acts by demonizing ordinary Canadian truckers as “Nazis” and “racists.”

Then, Trudeau passed an Online Streaming Act and Online News Act, which gave the government expansive new powers to regulate what happens and what you see online.

In January, Alex Gutentag and John Morrison reported that the Trudeau government had used disinformation to justify its crackdown on the Freedom Convoy. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), Canada’s national police force, then promoted this false information to other “Five Eyes” English-speaking nations.

This discovery is significant because it contributes to a pattern of intelligence agencies from the US, UK, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada, which have collaborated on surveillance since World War II, being caught abusing their powers to investigate and persecute the political enemies of elected officials.

In addition to this inorganic governmental element, placeable. To suggest otherwise is not only absurd but an affront to our very existence.

If one were to take 100 women and 10 men and drop them off on a deserted island, in 100 years you would find a thriving society full of men, women, boys and girls. Now what if one were to take 100 transwomen and 10 men and drop them off on a deserted island, what would you find in 100 years? Answer – You would find 110 corpses. This, I can say with certainty, is the unequivocal truth. I think it’s high time that feminists reclaim their voices and stand in solidarity against this assault on womanhood. Time to reject the false narratives of inclusivity that seek to erase our identities and experiences. Time to demand recognition and respect for the struggles and sacrifices of women throughout history. Not only does this concern extend beyond matters of sexuality but it also encompasses the ongoing treatment women endure at the hands of the prevailing gender.

For example, in the hallowed halls of council chambers, the struggle for gender equality rages on with women continuing to face entrenched biases and discrimination. Despite making strides in securing seats at the table, the journey towards true representation remains fraught with challenges and obstacles. Certain men in positions of power still believe they possess the authority to dominate and exert power over women. As a strong, independent woman on the council, I have borne witness to the insidious tactics employed by certain col-narrative that is coming out of the US Department of Defence, the Pentagon, the Navy, Congress, and the mainstream media since 2017. We need to be savvy to the prospect that the US has advanced technologies that are capable of staging a false flag alien invasion, as von Braun warned us about. The narrative is building, from Chinese balloons travelling over US airspace last year, to aliens walking among us in Las Vegas, Miami, and in the forests of South America, and admissions from military and intelligence personnel under oath. The recent Super Bowl commercial for a popular website developer showed Earth’s citizens receiving full frontal messages from aliens saying, “We’re here!”

Something is going on. The cards are being shuffled, leagues to undermine my authority, diminish my contributions, and silence my voice.

The pervasive atmosphere of the “old boys’ club” rears its ugly head time and time again, with certain members using inappropriate and unwelcome conversations of a sexual nature and the use of psychological harassment. We have a mayor who resorts to tactics such as yelling and name-calling, all designed to belittle, discredit, and intimidate not only me, but other women who attend Council chambers for refusing to sit down or because they did not obey when told to stop speaking. Despite the strides made by having three women on council, the unfortunate reality is that not all female councillors champion the cause of women’s rights. In a disappointing turn of events, I have found myself isolated and marginalized, with no support. Instead of embracing diversity of thought and perspective, certain councillors persist in perpetuating a toxic culture of misogyny and disrespect.

The struggle for gender equality extends beyond mere representation—it is about creating an inclusive and equitable environment where all voices are heard and respected. Yet, the journey towards this ideal remains fraught with challenges, as evidenced by my request for additional security measures at council meetings due to targeted harassment and intimidation towards women.

As I prepare to once again speak truth to power on sensitive topics, I am bracing myself for the inevitable backlash and vitriol that will ensue. The prospect of being yelled at, called names, and ridiculed is a sobering reminder of the uphill battle that women continue to face in the pursuit of speaking the truth and fighting for justice and equality.

I will continue to speak out against injustice, champion the cause of women’s rights, and fight tirelessly for a more inclusive and equitable society that does not divide people by the colour of their skin, religious beliefs, or sexual preferences.

tions against hate speech while protecting freedom of expression and due process. The Liberals have not found that balance.”

And some NGOs, like the Canadian Constitution Foundation, are fighting back. Baron told told Public that she is unaware of any other countries that impose life sentences for hate speech.

“The UK and Australia have brought in similar online harms legislation, and they’ve been focused on things like platforms having a duty of care to the user and the child protection legislation,” Baron said. “As far as I know, none of their packages had similar criminal provisions surrounding hate speech, and certainly not the public.”

But that’s where those nations may be headed. Canada appears to be playing a role similar to Ireland: to push the envelope in the war on free speech and democracy. The good news is that, as this pattern becomes visible, we become less vulnerable to it.

It’s up to lovers of free speech in Canada, the U.S., and other Western nations to expose what appears to be a coordinated effort by governments to regulate speech at a minimum and undermine free speech and democracy at a maximum.

Is Measles a Real Threat or More Pharma Fear Mongering?

By Ted Kuntz

The mainstream media and pro-vaccine advocates in public health and government would have you believe we are at serious risk of a measles epidemic as a result of “vaccine hesitancy.” There is no doubt that there is an increase in parents questioning the vaccine narrative. Recent polls reveal that 1 in 6 parents say they are “really against” vaccinating their children, a four-fold increase from 2019. There has also been a significant increase in the proportion of Canadians who oppose mandatory childhood vaccination and say it should be the parent’s decision. The question is whether the risk to the health and safety of our children is “vaccine hesitancy” or whether the risk is blind faith in the vaccine industry.

The vaccine industry would have you believe that all vaccines are safe and effective, vaccines are responsible for the significant decline in mortality in the last century, and vaccines are necessary for our children’s health. The evidence supports none of these statements. These statements are marketing propaganda masquerading as science. The vaccine industry would also have you believe that measles is a serious illness that puts our children’s lives at risk and that if everyone simply vaccinated their children, then measles would be eradicated. These statements are also not supported by the evidence.

A Childhood Rite of Passage

Prior to the introduction of the measles vaccine in 1963, measles was considered a childhood rite of passage. Virtually all children had measles. It was a time to stay home and to be cared for by one’s parents. They even made a Brady Bunch TV program about the benefits of having measles. Those of us old enough to have experienced measles are mystified by the drama and fear-mongering surrounding measles today.

For those who have only experienced measles through pharmaceutical marketing campaigns, measles presents as a whole-body rash, complete with fever, congestion, a cough, and pinkeye that lasts about a week. Measles is “highly contagious,” and before vaccination, almost all children contracted measles.

The Measles Vaccine

When the measles vaccine was introduced in 1963, the promise was that one shot would confer life-long immunity and that measles would be eradicated by 1967. We now know that neither of these claims were true. The measles vaccine does not confer life-long immunity, as evidenced by the “need” for boosters, and outbreaks regularly occur in fully vaccinated populations. Measles is still with us today after more than 60 years of vaccination. What is not considered in the rush to inject every child is what is lost because of vaccination. Vaccine advocates rarely admit that recovery from natural exposure to measles confers life-long immunity. More importantly, mothers who have been vaccinated for measles do not transfer long-lasting maternal antibodies to their infants that protect the infant in the first few months of life. That means that infants of vaccinated mothers are at increased risk.

Also not acknowledged is that while measles was once a serious illness in past centuries, the mortality from measles declined by 98.5% and was no longer considered a public health threat BEFORE the vaccine was introduced. To describe measles as a “killer disease” is fraudulent!

Is the Measles Vaccine Safe?

When the mainstream media and vaccine industry claim that the vaccine is “safe,” they are misleading the public. Would the public agree the measles vaccine is “safe” when, as of May 31, 2023, there have been more than 109,499 reports of measles vaccine reactions made to the Vaccine Adverse Events Reporting System (VAERS) in the United States, including 547 deaths?

Further, a US Health and Human Services study acknowledged that less than 1% of vaccine adverse events are reported. That means the number of injuries and deaths could realistically be 100 times the reported numbers. If so, do 10,949,900 reactions and 54,700 deaths sound safe? The undisputed fact is that the safety of the measles vaccine has not been proven against a true placebo. Thus, the claims that the vaccine has been proven safe are false.

There is substantial evidence that the MMR (measles, mumps, rubella) vaccine is causing neurological damage in some children and that administering the MMR vaccine before three years of age can cause regressive autism. Autism has become an epidemic, with more than 1 in 36 children diagnosed. But it seems the media thinks measles is a bigger threat than autism.

Dr. Richard Moskowitz, a family physician with more than 50 years of clinical experience, deems the measles vaccine as “an unhealthy reprogramming of the immune system that trades off the acute, vigorous responses to infection in favour of “weaker, but ongoing, chronic responses that have rendered us a lot sicker than we would have been had we simply left well enough alone.””

The Rise of Vaccine Hesitancy

The vaccine industry, which includes the media, would have us believe that “vaccine hesitancy” is a danger to society. We see it otherwise. At Vaccine Choice Canada, we view the increase in parents asking questions about vaccine safety, efficacy, and necessity as an indication that parents are doing their due diligence. The reality is that almost all modern diseases originate from a disturbed immune system. No other drug intervenes in the immune system as intensively as a vaccine, and the effects of vaccination are irreversible.

The vaccine industry greatly exaggerates the risk of experiencing diseases targeted by vaccines. Measles is a classic example of the hype common with vaccine proponents. The reality is that permanent injury and death from measles are exceedingly rare in a developed country like Canada. Neil Rau, an infectious disease specialist, and Dr. Richard Schabas, MD, Ontario’s former Chief Medical Officer, stated in an October 2018 article titled “Stop the Hysteria Over Measles Outbreaks” that “The borderline hysteria fueled by the media and public health that greets a few cases is unwarranted ... At current rates, Canada can expect to see a death from acute measles about once every hundred years or so.”

Vaccine hesitancy is not a “threat to global health,” as the World Health Organization (WHO) claims. Instead, it is responsible parents doing their due diligence and finding that the vaccine industry’s claims that vaccines are safe, effective, and necessary are wanting. And that is what the vaccine industry is afraid of.

crazy,” or “Oh, I don’t think you’re unkind!” Then, when the person turns out to actually be nasty or deranged, they can rightly protest that we have no right to be angry at them; after all, they told us what they are.

In a similar way, the globalists are not hiding their intentions behind some secret cypher. They’re telling us openly that we are their enemy. That they want us to eat bugs. That they want us herded into 15-minute cities, where they plan to monitor, track, and control us. And that their end goal is to get rid of billions of us.

Yet here, too, the average, non-psychopathic person’s response to such admissions is one of reassurance. “That’s not what they’re really saying. They’re just demonstrating that there’s a problem. They’re not talking about killing us. And even if they were, it’s because they care for us!”

When the globalists proceed to do the very things they announced they were going to do, we can hardly act surprised, can we? After all, they did warn us!

Paraphrasing Angelou, then, perhaps we can come up with some apt “relationship advice” for those stuck in a Stockholm Syndrome bond with their elitist captors:

When genocidal, anti-human psychopaths tell you who they are, believe them!

So, What is Our Message?

You didn’t think I would leave things there, did you? Of course not. The real point of parsing the globalists’ (not-so-) secret message is that doing so helps us to clarify our own position.

When you boil it down, it’s actually pretty basic. The globalists hate life and want to end it. To counteract them, we must cherish life and seek to preserve it.

Allow me to quote myself at length from my 2016 editorial on “The Greatest Blessing”:

“We are programmed to look out for danger and respond to threats. It’s instinctual, and well it should be. We live in a dangerous world and our family line wouldn’t have made it this far if there weren’t an eternal vigilance against potential perils.”

“But always focusing on the threats and dangers can send us off the deep end. Especially when dealing in the doom and gloom that pervades so much of the alternative media, it can be all too easy to dwell on the negative and forget why it is we’re fighting for truth and justice in the first place. In fact, it can become difficult to remember that we’re fighting for anything at all and just focus on fighting against. Against our enemies. Against the politicians and banksters and globalists and fraudsters and psychopaths.”

But, just like the returning war vet who can’t stop fighting the war in his head or the homicide detective who assumes everyone is a murder victim in waiting (or a murderer in waiting), this perspective starts to ruin our appreciation of the world until we forget why it is we even cared in the first place.”

“Sadly, this isn’t some theoretical problem. I get dozens of emails a week from people who are frightened and angry and at their wits’ end, asking me how I manage to keep doing this work given all the evil that we are facing. The answer is so simple that I’m not sure it can be taught, only perceived. In short, the answer is that I love my life. I love my family and my friends and watching clouds roll by on a lazy summer afternoon and reading a good book and hearing the sound of my son’s laughter and, yes, hearing my daughter’s cry. The cry of a healthy, growing newborn. This is why I care. I care because life is worth living, and I see that deep down most people are the same; they just want to enjoy their families and their friends and their time on this planet, too. I’m not fighting against the powers that shouldn’t be. I’m fighting for all of those things in the world that are worth saving.”

That’s my not-so-secret message. What’s yours?

Bill versus Charter

By Jane Scharf

We live in one of the finest, most modern democracies in the world that has taken centuries to develop. The parliamentary system that has evolved in our Constitution recognizes the people of Canada as sovereign. We have a powerful piece of legislation in the Canadian Bill of Rights (Bill) that helps protect this country from tyrannical infiltration, such as communism-globalism. It is essential to have strong legal rights legislation. For tyrannical infiltration to be successful, it is necessary to eliminate your legal rights and freedoms so the state can use the police and military to put you into a new political system without your consent.

The author of the Bill, former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, understood that Canada was at risk of communism replacing our democratic Canadian political system. Diefenbaker told us that his proposed Bill would protect Canada from communism.

Although we have lost some ground democratically, thanks to legislation brought in by former Primer Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau,¹ such as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, our human rights and fundamental freedoms are still intact because the Bill is still holding strong. Canadians are rapidly learning about the pitfalls of the Charter and turning to the Bill to defend against arbitrary fines and arrests, as well as wrongful dismissal based on vaccine passport requirements.

This article examines some of the history of our human rights and fundamental freedoms eventually brought under the Bill and reviews the current communist-globalist attack on Canada escalated through the pandemic. I hope to help people understand their legal rights and the importance of asserting them to maintain our democracy.

Not to worry; we are holding the line and many brave Canadians have stepped up to defend our beloved country. So far, we are in the lead.

The method being used to undermine our democracy and replace it with communism-globalism is primarily to destabilize the country and demoralize the people. It comes straight out of the communist handbook.² They are carrying out their plans subversively. In order to pull it off, they have to be able to legally get the police and military to act against the people, which is not permitted now under Canadian law. One technique they use is trauma-based mind control called psychological operations (psyops), which is done through infiltration of our government and main institutions, including schools, mainstream press, social media, and our protest movements.

There have been thousands of Bill wins regarding Covid-19-related charges. For example, Dave Freedom, who was criminally charged for protesting his charges, had them dropped in his challenge by using the freedom of speech and assembly portion of the Bill. We have more wins³ for charges related to Covid, the Freedom Convoy, and Rolling Thunder on the record.

An Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

In reading the Bill,⁴ the preamble indicates that the State is recognizing and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms, i.e., God-given by virtue of being human. The State is committing to protect these rights. Note that this Act obligates the State, including the King, and puts no obligations on the citizens of Canada.

Part 1-1 of the Bill lays out those rights and freedoms recognized and protected by the government. It is the “Rule of Law” that individuals have a right to equal benefit and protection under the law. It protects the right to life, liberty, security of person, and enjoyment of property. It protects the freedoms of religion, speech, the press, and of assembly and association. It also guarantees legal rights, such as the rights to counsel and a fair hearing.

Part 1-2 indicates the only way the Bill can be changed. Rights in the Bill are protected in Common Law, so they cannot be removed by legislation. For example, with the to choose those who shall govern my country. This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind.”

—John G. Diefenbaker

THE CHARTER

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms opening statement:

“Section 1 The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.”

Right out of the gate, unlike the Bill that recognizes your God given “human” rights, the Charter merely guarantees the “rights” laid out in the Charter. These are government-issued rights that can be and are currently being taken away easily without court or parliamentary approval under the Covid-19 bylaws. And it eliminates the preamble from the Bill that talks about free individuals and free institutions and the importance of family. This was not an accident. This omission is to help us move towards communism where humans are not free, institutions are not free, and the family has little or no importance. And it has eliminated the right to enjoy property (this is also a communist purpose as land rights interfere with their aim to control all land use) and the right to equality before the law and protection from the law (also important to establish communism).

We will start with a description of what happens in a Charter Challenge. In the Charter, the rights (note not human rights) are said to be guaranteed. Look up the guarantee; it allows conditions. And that condition is the State can set limits on your rights without going to court or passing an Act through parliament. They merely have to claim, not prove, that they have justifiable reason such as they have done with the Covid-19 measures, which violate all your rights. These Covid-19 measures violate all your fundamental rights. And to try and get them back, you must go to Court.

There are many problems with the Charter Challenge approach of fighting Covid-19 measures

Your right to life, liberty, security of persons, enjoyment of property, the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law (Common Law), the right to be treated equally by the law and protected equally by the law, freedom of religion, speech, assembly, association, and press are all violated with the Covid-19 measures.

If you use the Charter, there will be the problems and impediments you face in trying to get your rights back.

Section 1 is sometimes called the Mack Truck clause because it is a big enough loop hole for a Mack Truck to drive through. This section limits any and all your rights and freedoms without court approval or public debate in advance. Charter Challenge is the only recourse, which is lengthy, complicated, and expensive. Section 24 even gives the judge enough authority to override your Common Law rights.

See ‘Is the Charter Enough?’ p.11 case of Alford v. Canada 2022. The bottom line is that the rights and freedoms cannot be abridged unless there is due process of law, which is a judicial decision calling for it, and an Act of Federal Parliament to pass the reduction of rights into law. This is very difficult and unlikely to happen because judges are required to respect established Common Law rights. And to date, no rights have been removed, nor has there been any attempt to do so, since the Bill was passed in 1960. Conversely, with the Charter, they can just bang out bylaws that violate all your rights under section 1 and leave it up to you to go to Court and challenge the reasonableness of the violations.

The best thing about the Bill is that you can cite it anywhere the government including police or private persons are enforcing Covid-19 measures with sanctions. The Bill applies in all cases where force is used because this is federally regulated activity (Criminal Code of Canada) when they are using force. And the Bill can be cited without notice in all proceedings related to Covid-19 measures where force is used. This includes bylaw tickets, criminal charges, and Section 22 closures of churches or businesses.

The Bill was presented to the federal parliament in Canada by John Diefenbaker and passed into law in 1960. The Bill was an attempt to codify all your Common Law rights that back the Bill up when used in formal proceedings. When you use the Bill, you do not have to argue whether there was a good enough reason your rights were violated. To seek a remedy, you only have to show your rights were violated.

Diefenbaker was concerned about keeping communism out of Canada and the Bill was the tool he believed would work to do the job. Here is a famous quote by Diefenbaker that he made when the Bill passed:

“I am a Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship GOD in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, or free

Big Pharma and the Billionaires Invested in the Gender Industry

By Jennifer Bilek

There is no transgender community that pushes an ideology of body dissociation around the world—at lightning speed—into language, law, institutions, and the media simultaneously. We are governed by oligarchs at the highest echelons of finance, and they have a vested interest in the gender industry.

“Gender identity” ideology is not politically separate from business. Business is no longer separate from politics. We in Western cultures are governed by billionaires in finance who drive policy through our political institutions. A façade of democracy shrouds the oligarchy we live in, just like the gender performances in gender ideology shroud the capitalist profiteering from the colonization of human sex.

Many people view the gender industry as solely or predominantly a political issue, one that sets the rights of one group above or against another’s. While antagonized factions do fight with each other, business reigns.

Jon Stryker is one of the billionaires driving “gender identity” globally. He finances his LGBT non-governmental organization, Arcus Foundation, from his stock in medical multinational Stryker Corporation, to which he is the heir. Vanguard Group, one of the world’s biggest investment companies, holds the largest share of stock in Stryker Corporation. BlackRock, the most significant investment company in the world (global assets total $20 trillion), is the third-largest holder of Stryker Corporation stock and the biggest holder of Vanguard Group stock. The fourth is Greenleaf Trust, the financial management company Jon Stryker left to create Arcus Foundation. Cumulatively, these investment houses own Stryker Medical and would hold influence over its operations.

Those at the pinnacle of the global LGBT corporate juggernaut come from banking and investment, not human rights. BlackRock employs a former Federal Reserve vice chairman and a former head of the Swiss National Bank. BlackRock recently rolled out a “queer” credit card through MetaBank, part of Meta Financial Group. Meta Financial Group’s largest shareholder is BlackRock.

BlackRock states that LGBT diversity is “in their DNA” in their LGBT outreach to Asia. MetaBank was one of the banks that sent our stimulus checks to America during the COVID crisis. A CNN report claims, “BlackRock is so powerful that the federal government has asked for its help during each of the past two recessions. In March, the Fed tapped BlackRock to manage the first-of-its-kind vehicle to buy corporate debt, including junk bonds.”

Authentic Brands Group was on the receiving end of an $875 million investment by BlackRock in 2019. Authentic Brands Group owns 50 brands, including Sports Illustrated, which has now featured on its covers not just one, but four men claiming womanhood for themselves. Its Aeropostale brand donates money to LGBT causes from its “gender-neutral” collection.

Black Rock owns the lion’s share of stock in 38 companies donating to Planned Parenthood, which has become the largest provider of cross-sex hormones to young people. They are also among, or the largest shareholders, along with Vanguard Group, of Johnson & Johnson pharmaceutical giant, Pfizer, United Therapeutics, GlaxoSmithKline, AbbVie (the makers of Lupron), Merck, and Novartis. It would be easier to list the Pharma giants not owned by BlackRock. They also own most of our media conglomerates, such as Comcast and Disney, our payment platforms and banks, and our food corporations. They own banks such as Deutsche Bank, Goldman Sachs, and JP Morgan Chase, all of whom have shown a keen interest in “gender identity.” They own our textile companies, and they own Big Tech.

BlackRock, along with the Vanguard Group (which they own as well), nearly own the world, and it’s obvious they have an investment in the ideology of “gender identity.” What exactly are they investing in when they financially support this new ideology being driven across the globe?

We must look at what “gender identity” accomplishes in the world to understand this and why the largest banks and investment houses in the world have any interest in a tiny minorities’ identity issues. “Gender identity” does double duty. First, it opens markets in sexual identity. Without it, the already massively profitable corporate identities created out of same-sex attraction could not be expanded. Without violating the boundaries of male and female, all that exists are lesbian, bisexual, gay, and straight people as a marketing constituency. Add “gender identity,” which provides an illusion of changing sex, placing it on a spectrum, and the marketing constituency expands infinitely. As “gender” ideologists are fond of reporting, there are as many genders as there are people. Any marketing graduate can tell you that honing your message to smaller and smaller, more distinct groups is a recipe for success. Not only are medical identities profitable in this equation, but profits soar for everyone.

Make-up lines, like Crayola’s new Boing Boing, for so-called “gender fluid” individuals, Jecca, a London-based unisex brand of make-up that launched in 2012, Sephora’s Phluid non-binary fragrance line, clothing lines like TomBoyX which market traditional men’s boxer shorts shaped for women’s bodies, are just a few small examples of the marketing opportunities that occur when the boundary between male and female is blurred, and sex has been pronounced as existing on a spectrum. These product lines help to make the illusion more real that we are not a sexually dimorphic species and that there is some other way to be human while supporting new markets.

The cosmetic industry is worth a staggering $532. Billion dollars. Until recently, males wearing cosmetics were limited primarily to the music industry. “Gender identity” changes all that. It builds a bridge for men to accept hair, fashion, and cosmetic enhancements that were traditionally the sole territory of women. The 2021 catwalks were ablaze with a so-called feminine menswear trend, which the fashion industry calls “male femininity.” The men’s personal-care market is expected to hit $166 billion in 2022. Vogue reported two years ago that high fashion houses like Chanel, Tom Ford, and Marc Jacobs were unveiling make-up lines for men.

“Gender identity” also works as a grooming apparatus that dissociates us from our sexed reality. The language and laws being changed, even in our medical institutions, for “gender identity” ideology are based on the deconstruction of sex. The gender performances in gender ideology obscure the corporate mining of our reproductive capacities for profit. We are being reduced to parts—no longer men and women—but breasts, penises, vaginas, wombs, eggs, and sperm that can be bought by either sex, for either sex.

The gender industry has nothing to do with inclusivity. It is about corporate profiteering.

RECOMMENDATIONS

We recommend that you get involved and engage to protect our democracy. We need to oppose the communist agenda by maintaining our rights and freedoms as sovereign people. In a communist state, the rights of the people are subject to the whims of the state and the state’s interests override the rights and freedoms of the people. In other words, that is a country where the state is sovereign, not the people.

- 1) Anyone who tells you that Canada is already a communist country, and all our police are fascist needs to be corrected. This is part of the demoralization process, and we have people embedded in the movement by communists to try and convince us we have already lost our rights because we are now a communist country.
- 2) Do not be fooled by people who tell you that all the police, courts, and government are corrupt. We are infiltrated, but there are many patriotic police, court, and government officials. Support these people. For example, pay attention to the fact the Senate is investigating Trudeau’s illegal imposition of the Emergencies Act. They need our support. Send them affidavits with information that you saw that the Truckers Convoy 2022 was legal and peaceful. There was always one lane and all intersections open at all times. The gathering was not threatening or violent. Also, send them footage of the protest, if you have it. You can see Q and A on the Emergencies Act and a Confirmation of Truckers Peaceful Assembly at the top of the page at Stand4thee.com under Brian Derksen’s continued truckers action.

- 3) Pass the word about the power of the Bill to keep communism out of Canada.
- 4) Anyone using the Charter needs to be told about its loopholes and why they are dangerous.
- 5) Get up to snuff on the Emergencies Act. Check out paragraph 3 of Parts 3 and 6 and you will see that Trudeau did not bring this Act in legally. He was not to violate our rights and he did. He was to have a good reason under Part 3 and he did not. And he was to seek permission under Part 6 from the entire federal cabinet in Parliament before invoking the EA and he did do not this. This is important to understand so we can hold him accountable and stop him from rights violations in the future. Demand that Trudeau be charged with Treason under section 46 2(a) of the Criminal Code.

- 6) You can make phone calls to your MPP, Senator, and the Police.
- 7) And above all, remember Canada is a democratic country, so the people are sovereign, not the Prime Minister. We have natural God-given rights that are protected in legislation, such as the Canadian Bill of Rights, that the government and the Monarchy are subject to. Learn them and how to assert them.

- WeightWatchers has issued an apology to its customers, admitting they “got it wrong” in the past when they said weight is a matter of diet and lifestyle. In a strategic shift, the company now plans to incorporate weight-loss medications such as Ozempic into their plan.
- Over 140,000 US farms were lost in just five years. Between 2017 and 2022, the number of farms in the US declined by 141,733, or 7% —an area loss equivalent to the size of the state of Maine. Meanwhile, in that same amount of time, insect protein and lab-grown meat investor Bill Gates became the largest private owner of farmland in the US, currently owning over 270,000 acres across 18 states.
- In the ongoing landmark fluoride trial—that seeks to prohibit the addition of fluoride to water in the US—an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) risk assessor admitted under oath that fluoride is neurotoxic even at relatively low levels. Furthermore, the agency’s key expert witness on fluoride’s neurotoxicity conceded to serious flaws in his own study.
- In possibly a new record, after a FOIA request by the Epoch Times, the CDC (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention) released their 148-page report on myocarditis after COVID-19 mRNA vaccination—it is completely blank due to a full redaction of absolutely everything it contains.
- Was “long COVID” just a fad? Australian Chief Health Officer Dr. John Gerrard says a scientific study proves “long COVID” doesn’t exist. One of Australia’s leading doctors urges everyone to refrain from using the term “long COVID” following a new study that found the long-term effects of the coronavirus are no different from those of other viruses. The study, conducted by Queensland Health, examined 5,000 Queenslanders and found that adults who tested positive for COVID did not experience an increased rate of “long-COVID”-like symptoms compared to those who had the flu or a cold.
- Dengue fever has spiked fourfold in Brazil following the release of millions of gene-edited mosquitos by the United Nations’ World Mosquito Program. In the first five weeks of 2024, over 364,000 cases of dengue infection have been reported—four times greater than previous cases in the same period in 2023. The dramatic spike in dengue cases has prompted Brazil to purchase millions of doses of the dengue vaccine.
- Electric vehicles (EVs) release more toxic particles into the atmosphere and are worse for the environment than their gas-powered counterparts, according to a resurfaced study recently highlighted by the Wall Street Journal (bit.ly/3TpCu01). According to Emission Analytics, who conducted the study, modern cars have improved in cleanliness so much that most vehicle-related pollution while driving actually comes from tire wear. The study found that EV tires and brakes, with their significantly heavier load, release 1,850 times more particle pollution compared to modern tailpipes, which have “efficient” exhaust filters.

- A new whistleblower video shows Pfizer’s principal scientist admitting that the company skipped 10 years’ worth of safety testing and had significant knowledge of mRNA vaccine side effects, but released the COVID-19 jab anyway. Justin Leslie, a former Pfizer employee and whistleblower, released the video recording of a private conversation with Kanwal Gill, a principal scientist at Pfizer, online. Kanwal also talked about how they had been attempting to market vaccine mRNA technology for 50 years, but due to side effects, were not able to do so until the company used the pandemic to bring mRNA vaccines to market.

- When CTV News asked Ontario Premier Doug Ford about what he learned from the pandemic four years later, he responded with: “I think we did extremely well compared to the rest of the world.” Reminder: Ford implemented a province-wide vaccine passport system that compelled businesses to restrict unvaccinated patrons in places like restaurants, sporting events, and movie theatres or face steep fines. His government also strongly advocated for a six-foot social distancing measure that, in turn, appeared to greatly financially benefit to his labelling company, Deco Labels.
- For years, people who believed COVID was like a bad cold or flu were called “conspiracy theorists.” Now, the CDC has issued new isolation guidelines for COVID-19 that are in line with the flu and other viral respiratory illnesses.
- FDA Chief Dr. Peter Marks acknowledges that the “avalanche of reports was tremendous,” referring - to adverse event reports from the COVID-19 vaccines. As noted during the hearing by the Select Subcommittee on the Coronavirus Pandemic, as of February 2024, Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) reports for COVID-19 vaccines total significantly higher than all other vaccines combined since 1990.

- Goodfellas Wood Oven Pizza, with seven locations in Toronto, Ontario, is charging people a 2% carbon fee on all orders to fight climate change.
- Despite a decline in viewership, the federal government pledged to give the CBC yet another $1.4 billion handout for the 2024-2025 fiscal year. In the 2022-2023 fiscal year, CBC received $1.3 billion from the federal government. The CEO also disclosed that the company paid out bonuses totalling $14.9 million in the same fiscal year. CBC fails to see their decline in viewership as being related to the lies they tell, instead claiming it is due to “news fatigue following two years of the COVID-19 crisis.”
- COVID-19 lockdowns had high health and economic costs, study shows. A recent Swedish study published in the Economic Affairs Journal (Andersson & Jonung) found that Sweden’s less restrictive COVID-19 policies, in contrast to other European nations that imposed stronger lockdown rules, led to lower excess mortality. Sweden also suffered a lower negative impact on GDP growth during the COVID era.
- After millions received mandated vaccinations in the name of protecting others, FDA Chief finally admits that the COVID-19 vaccines may not prevent transmission of disease. During a hearing with the Select Subcommittee on the Coronavirus Pandemic. FDA Chief of the Center for Biologics Evaluation and Research, Dr. Peter Marks claimed, “it may not prevent infection” as the data on transmission is “challenging to pin down.”
- Of all media outlets, CTV News reports that Ontario Hospital staffing shortages could be due to COVID-19 vaccine mandates. Unions representing Ontario hospital workers continue to label the province’s staffing crisis as being at its “breaking point.”
- France’s “Pfizer Amendment” could potentially turn mRNA critics into criminals according to a highly-controversial law that was just pushed through the National Assembly. The draconian law aims to throw journalists who advise against the use of therapeutic or prophylactic treatment (including experimental mRNA gene therapy) into prison for up to three years and pay a hefty fine of 45,000 euros.
- Regina, Saskatchewan’s oldest Catholic church, Blessed Sacrament, becomes the 100th vandalized church in Canada since 2021. Captured on video, the gas-carrying, mask-wearing arsonist was just one of a flurry of arsonists that have targeted churches following the residential schools’ mass graves announcement in 2021. Of the hundred countrywide church attacks, fourteen served congregations on Indian reserves, and eleven churches were hit on a single day in Calgary.
